

Midland National[®] Spousal Continuance

When a Spouse is the Owner's Primary Beneficiary We Offer a Unique Option

As the owner's sole primary beneficiary of a Midland National annuity contract, you have the opportunity to elect the spousal continuance option. This option, based on the contract, may allow you to continue the contract, free of any surrender penalties¹, as the new owner.

Under the spousal continuance option, you will be entitled to all of the benefits available under the Midland National annuity contract. You may...

- Leave your annuity contract in force, allowing the current value of the annuity to continue earning tax-deferred interest² and growing at a competitive interest rate.
- Begin taking annuity income payments from the Contract. Midland National has several income options from which you may choose that can be tailored to meet your needs. For example, you may choose to receive an income for a specified period of time or over the course of your lifetime.
- Withdraw funds from the Contract by taking a partial or full distribution. Please note that withdrawing annuity proceeds may result in unplanned tax consequences, and will forfeit future annuity growth potential. Midland National recommends that you discuss this option with a tax professional.

Peace of Mind

At Midland National, we understand this may not be the ideal time for you to make important financial decisions. Electing the spousal continuance option allows you to make the decision that is best for you, in a time frame that is best for you. Your contract will remain in force, earning tax-deferred interest until you determine the course of action that will best meet your financial needs.
