

What you need to know about ... life insurance

What is life insurance?

Life insurance is actually a simple answer to a difficult question: How will my loved ones manage financially if I were to die? If anyone depends on your income or the unpaid work you do, they would most likely struggle if you were to pass away.

Life insurance pays a death benefit to your loved ones when you die. It can help replace your income and the many non-paid ways you support your household. Your family can use the death benefit to help pay for immediate and ongoing expenses like funeral costs, daily expenses, a mortgage or rent, and keep a business afloat. It can also be used for future expenses like college tuition, retirement and more.

How much does life insurance cost?

The good news is, life insurance may be less expensive than you think. The cost depends on four main factors: your age, your health, the type of policy and how much coverage you buy. Generally, you'll pay less the younger and healthier you are.

To put it in perspective, a healthy 30-year-old may be able to buy a $250,000 20-year level term policy for about $200 per year.¹ That means if you purchase that policy and pay the $200 per year without fail, your loved ones would get $250,000 if you were to die at any point during those 20 years.*

Through hard work and sacrifice, Robert Loera gave his family the American dream. He also made sure to protect it with life insurance. Now their dream continues, despite his death. Discover their story: lifehappens.org/loera.

What are the different types of insurance?

Life insurance generally falls into two categories:

Term life insurance provides protection for a specific period of time (the “term” is often 10, 20 or 30 years). This makes sense when you need protection for a specific amount of time—for instance, until your kids graduate from college or your mortgage is paid off. Term life insurance typically offers the most amount of coverage for the lowest initial premium, and is a good choice for those on a tighter budget.

Permanent life insurance provides lifelong protection as long as you pay the required premiums. It also provides “living benefits” like the ability to accumulate cash value on a tax-deferred basis, which you can tap into to help buy a home, cover an emergency expense and more. Because of these additional benefits, initial premiums are higher than what you’d pay for a term life insurance policy with the same amount of coverage.

Sometimes getting a combination of term and permanent insurance is another option.

How much life insurance do I need?

The amount of life insurance to buy depends on who you want to protect financially and for how long. An easy way to get a working idea of how much you need is to use an online Life Insurance Needs Calculator, like lifehappens.org/howmuch.

Understanding how you get life insurance.

A great way is to work with a licensed insurance agent who can walk you through the process, which is a no-cost, no-obligation conversation. You can also work directly with an insurance company through an entirely online process. Remember, the best life insurance policy is the one you have in place.

Protecting the future:

The Miller family

Young mom Katie Miller was adamant about getting life insurance. Her husband, Stephen, felt they didn’t need it because they were young and healthy. When Katie died of cancer at 30, Stephen was grateful he lost that argument. Discover their story: lifehappens.org/miller.
